Correspondence of the Whig & Courier.

ANGORA, Jan. 5th, 1863.

The History of the State seems to be an interesting volume, and I wish to add the time and space sufficient to present it to the world.

Its gray walls have witnessed various scenes, some of which will never be repeated, and many will never be told. How varied the emotions it elicits. Do we visit the Treasury, the Capitol Office, the Secretary's Department, the emotion is curiosity—we convert money, land of slavery.

The Adjutant General's Department excites martial ardor. We visit our museums, stroll forward the stomach, and throw back the shoulders with twenty eight inch steps, and consequential air we enter its warlike portal.

But the Council Chamber we approach with awe—and well we may—it is the brain of the State. Its legitimate occupants are men of parts, they are selected for their wondrous wisdom. Here off and steps slowly and softly when you intrude your unwelcome presence into a consecrated area. This chamber is a sacred. We cannot comprehend it all at once. They are dazzled by its towering dome. When we recover from the shock we can observe other beauties, and as slowly and by degrees it we realize its majestic and awe inspiring features. Today it is a museum, seeking forth by its warlike monuments the memory of the past, and adding the busts of Presidents, remarkably fitting icons upon community, bastions of the Peace without limit.

But among its varied scenes, none have been as pleasant and yet regretful, as the one which I witnessed last evening. It was the farewell of the Chief Magistrate to his associates in office, and the several assistants whom, during his official term, he has called and had his.

I must quit the minor events of the evening. All that I have to "junkies," who may and may not favor the work with the conversation, the constant and refreshing of the occasion. Gov. Washburn made an affectionate farewell to the gentlemen of the Council, of the several executive departments, and those who had been associated with him in the discharge of civil and military duties during the past year.

He paid a glowing tribute to the efficiency and arduous services of these gentlemen in their several departments and, and reminded that whatever of success had attended his administration, was due to his able and devoted associates, especially designating the Adjutant General, the Acting Quartermaster General (Col Harding) and a place.

Gen. Holman responded, pointing out the great injustice which his Excellency had done himself in his tribute to others, whose labors, however earnest or devoted, had not equalled those of our Warblers.

Mr. Holden of the Council, Capt. Brinkworth of the U. S. A., Mr. Blaine and other gentlemen followed with eloquent and feeling remarks fitted to the occasion.

After partaking of a choice selection of refreshments served in an adjoining room, the assembly broke up. I regret that time and space deny me the pleasure of nothing, the event to any greater extent.

The Political condition is billowing and bubbles are turning every hour. The candidates for the several subordinate offices in the three branches of the Legislature are numerous and active.

The hour is drawing near when the "ball" will be thrown and the "game" will be played to the hilt, but it is not to be a "For Speaker, Mr. Dayley of Andover, seems to have the track. The Clerkship of the House will be offered to Mr. C. A. Miller of Rockland, the former Clerk, Mr. W. P. Dew of Augusta, and Private Secretary to the Governor, and Mr. Lowell of Pleasanton county, are the prominent candidates.

The Secretaryship of the Senate lies between Mr. Lincoln of Bath and Mr. East of Dighton, with the chance rather in favor of the latter, as I am informed. The candidates for Membership are so numerous that I must try to name them.

Will telegraph you the result of the caucus to-night.
